Breathing Space:
The Natural and Unnatural History of Air

"This book takes the novel approach of treating the air and atmosphere as a contiguous ecosystem—the world's largest and one of vital importance"

Zed Books, 2015

The Ecology of Everyday Things

"When people talk about 'celebrating nature', they usually have dramatic landscapes or charismatic creatures in mind. Mark Everard invites us to celebrate nature in the everyday, in the common places of our lives, and provides lots of information and inspiration along the way"

- Jonathon Porritt, Forum for the Future

The Business of Biodiversity

"Mark Everard keeps bringing the argument back to the way in which all our aspirations (for wealth, wellbeing, freedom, quality of life and so on) depend on protecting and enhancing the natural systems which underpin life on earth."

- Jonathon Porritt, Forum for the Future

The Hydropolitics of Dams:
Engineering or Ecosystems?

"This book draws from both history and innovative theory and practice, contrasting engineering- and ecosystem-centred water management. It draws out ethical, economic and environmental themes, leading to a new synthesis to guide practical decision-making. Visionary yet scientifically-grounded, it informs students and academics, regulators and policy-makers, interested publics and, above all, tomorrow's water managers."

Common Ground:

The Sharing of Land and Landscapes for Sustainability

"...it's all about the connectivity between the land, water, climate, energy, culture, economy and human creativity. So don't go sticking this one into the pigeon hole marked 'Environmental Problems' – because that isn't what you'll unearth in 'Common Ground'."

- Jonathon Porritt, Forum for the Future
